Case Farms Receives Award of Honor for Commitment to Creating a Safe Workplace

GOLDSBORO, N.C. – July 22, 2014 – Case Farms, a leading poultry processor, has earned a Worker Safety Recognition Award from the American Meat Institute (AMI) for its Goldsboro facility. This award recognizes meat and poultry companies who demonstrate a strong commitment to creating a safer workplace for their employees. The award was presented to Case Farms during the AMI's Conference on Worker Safety, Health, Human Resources and the Environment in Kansas City, Mo.

Through this multi-tiered award program, AMI recognizes meat processors that have implemented effective worker safety programs for their employees. The award levels are determined by evaluating overall incident rates and components of each plant's safety program. Receiving an Award of Honor, the Case Farms Goldsboro processing plant received the highest regards throughout the evaluation process.

"Worker safety is an integral component of the culture at Case Farms," said Bobby Barragan, Case Farms' human resources director. "Our ongoing commitment to creating and providing the best worker safety program for our employees is a driving force behind our success. Receiving this award will serve to further motivate us to innovate new safety efforts at each of our facilities."

Adopting standards developed by the Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration's Voluntary Protection Program (OSHA VPP), Case Farms has designed reputable safety programs throughout its four complexes.
